SUPREME COURT TO RULE TODAY ON CORRUPTION PROBE

High State Tribunal To Be Asked To Prohibit Investigation of Earle Gov't

MAY ASK FOR DELAY

Defense May Ask Postponement Until Friday, So He May Prepare Answer

(By International News Service)

PHILADELPHIA, June 13—For the second time in less than a month, the state Supreme Court today will be asked to prohibit a proposed Dauphin County Grand Jury investigation of charges of graft and corruption against the Earle administration.

Representing Gov. George H. Earle, Attorney General Guy K. Bard and former Attorney General William A. Schnader will contend the proposed probe is "politically inspired" for the purpose of harming Democratic candidates in the November election.

Although the high tribunal sets today for hearing argument on the legality of the Grand Jury investigation, reports were current at Harrisburg that the Attorney General would request the court to postpone the hearing until Friday to give him additional time to prepare his answer to the amended petition of District Attorney Carl B. Shelley.

The Supreme Court denied Shelley's original request for an investigation because the evidence he presented was "vague and indefinite." In his amended petition, the Dauphin County District Attorney charges 14 members of the Democratic administration, including Gov. Earle and eight members of his administration, with "conspiracy, bribery, extortion, corrupt solicitation, blackmail, misfeasance, malfeasance, non-feasance and misdemeanor in office."

The Governor and his collegues, according to Shelley's petition, conspired since 1935 on wholesale macing, "kickbacks" on architects' fees on state construction, sale of legislation, shakedowns on state liquor purchases and take-offs on state truck purchases.

Bowers Executed

Rockview Penitentiary, Bellefonte, June 13—(INS)—Stolidly and steadfastly silent, Wendell Forrest Bowers, 25-year-old slayer of Mrs. Wilma V. Carpenter, pretty Montgomery county widow, maintained his boast today that "my chin is up; I can take it" as he went to his death in Pennsylvania's 253-year-old electric chair—its 267th victim.

Bowers entered the chair at 12.32 p. m., the first and only contact was made at 12.33 and he was pronounced dead by Dr. W. J. Schwartz, prison physician, at 12.35½ a. m.

Calmly, showing no signs of emotion other than glazing eyes and waxy complexion, the youthful slayer shuffled slowly into the execution chamber, his lips silently repeating the 23rd Pslam after the Rev. C. F. Lauer, prison chaplain.

The last words of the Pslam were still on his lips as the brown leather mask was pulled over his eyes and mouth. And instantly the first of the 2000 volts poured through his body, heaving it gently as his outstretched hands folded into a tight clinch.

"WE ARE WHAT WE EAT" SAY NOTED PHYSICIANS

That some people give much thought to food and diet in relation to health and efficiency—others, not enough, is the conclusion of the Doctors Sadler in their new and interesting volume "DIET and FOOD VALUES", the third volume in the MODERN HEALTH LIBRARY, presented exclusively to readers of the Courier.

"The scientific principles involved in cooking are but little understood," points out the authors. "The cook should be a person of scientific training. Of all the household servants, human health and happiness demand, on the part of the cook, the greatest intelligence together with such a thorough understanding of foodstuffs as will enable her properly to combine and prepare the daily ration. The cook should understand the nutritive value of foods, their heat-producing qualities, good and bad combinations, and the proportion of the various elements each contains, so that each meal may be fairly well balanced."

Here and There in Bucks County Towns

J. Harry Hoffman, of Doylestown, who in April completed 30 years as superintendent of Bucks County Schools, is one of four in the state who have had 30 or more years of tenure. The others are D. A. Kline, of Perry County; George Grim, of Northampton county, and William W. Evans, of Columbia county.

Seeking to raise $8,000, which is $1,500 more than they asked for last year, members of the Doylestown Village Improvement Association will start their annual canvass for funds on Monday, June 13, and hope to close it a month later, Mrs. George P. Kerr told members and friends of the association when the cornerstone for the new hospital was laid.

Sellersville will say good-bye to its annual Fourth-of-July cannonading this year.

At a seven-hour meeting, apparently an all-time record, the borough council of that community decided that it should go along with the rest of the boroughs of the North Penn Valley in prohibiting fireworks in the future.

No prohibition will be clamped on this year, because of short notice and preparations already made by merchants for resuming the sale of fireworks under the old system.

Sellerville has had a unique arrangement for handling fireworks, permitting them to be displayed in stores throughout the Independence Day season, but prohibiting their delivery to the hands of buyers until July 4. At the same time, a borough ordinance strictly forbids the shooting off of fireworks anywhere in the community on any day but July 4.

This will be continued for this year only, and from 1939 on there will be no fireworks sold or discharged on the Fourth or any other day.

Councilmen felt that in view of the fact that Perkasie and Sellersville join in staging a big public fireworks exhibition each year, miscellaneous shooting off of gunpowder can easily be dispensed with.

Partly responsible for the length of the meeting, which opened at 6.30, was the fact that the councilmen made an inspection visit to the municipal catch basin. The tract surrounding the basin is being cleared by the WPA, which is also straightening the creek feeding it, along the Saw Mill road.

After several months of discussion during which time the question was thoroughly studied, the Board of Directors of the Children's Home near Quakertown took title to the American Rescue Workers' site and will conduct it as a local independent institution. The Board of Directors is comprised wholly of men from Upper Bucks county.

On May 21st, an agreement was entered into with the American Rescue Workers for the purchase of the property and a deposit of five hundred dollars was made as the initial payment. The price agreed upon is $4,750, which includes the Home as a "going concern" and the buildings fully equipped. The dwelling is a two and one-half story, twelve room, frame building, in good repair. A deep well has recently been drilled furnishing an abundant supply of water. There are approximately nine acres of land which will permit future development as well as provide ample playground facilities. Title is to be fully guaranteed with no encumbrances. The balance of the purchase price is to be paid within 90 days.

When His Children Were Born

(By "The Stroller")

A Bristol man who several years ago was engaged in taking the census of the foreign population here tells a funny story about one of the residents.

This particular individual was being questioned concerning his children and their respective ages. All his replies were to the effect that this child was born when the apples fell and this one was born when the leaves began to turn, while another was born when the cherries were ripe.

That is the nearest the census enumerator could get to the ages of the children. No record as to the year or day of month could be obtained from the father.

From the gymnasium the Cadets then paraded to the stadium for a drill, this being followed by a baseball game between Rutgers and the University of Virginia.

Loses Control of Car When Snapper Bites Driver's Hip

DOYLESTOWN, June 13—A 30-lb snapper turtle wrecked an automobile and sent two people to the Doylestown Hospital yesterday.

Charles W. Schultz, 57, proprietor of a restaurant here, was returning home from Germantown with his wife, Mrs. Mary Alice Schultz, 55. In the floor of the rear seat in a burlap bag, supposedly tied, was the turtle.

As the Schultz's were driving through New Britain borough, three miles west of here at noon, Schultz felt a sudden pain in his right hip. The snapper had crawled out of the bag and up the back of the front seat and fallen in between Schultz and his wife.

The snapper took a bite out of the restaurant proprietor's hip. Schultz lost control of the car and the machine crashed into a tree, wrecking it almost beyond repair.

Mrs. Schultz received a fractured left wrist, lacerations of both legs, abrasions and shock. Schultz received lacerations of the head and both knees, and suffered from shock.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

(Copyright, 1938, by The Baltimore Sun)

The Influential Insiders

Washington, June 11.

AS this session of Congress draws near its end, an overshadowing characteristic of the Roosevelt Administration, true of it from the start, stands out more clearly than ever—to wit, that the really influential advisers of the President are neither members of his Cabinet nor leaders of his party in Congress.

—o—

ON the contrary, with one or two exceptions they are men without previous distinction or experience, recently emerged from obscurity and wholly devoid of the sort of private achievement that would inspire confidence in them either as public officials or Presidential advisers. That a man is known by the company he keeps is as true in public as in private life, and there is no better yardstick with which to measure Mr. Roosevelt than the individuals who bask in his friendship, possess his complete confidence, and from whom he imbibes ideas and inspiration. It is these men who really mold his thought and through their influence with him run the country.

—o—

TO THOSE who know exactly who and what they are this is the most appalling single fact in the whole Administration setup. That, the President should have as economic advisers Mr. Leon Henderson, Isador Lubin, David Cushman Coyle and David Niles; that he should derive his taxation principles from Mr. Herman Oliphant, and select as his particularly intimate counselors both in politics and policies, Mr. Tommy Corcoran, Mr.

BUMBLEBEE TIME

Perhaps the most misunderstood and least appreciated member of the insect family who really deserves no little credit is the bumblebee. Because he seems to be a man of leisure, who spends his summer gorging himself instead of storing up honey for the coming winter, he has been called a parasite and a vagrant.

In Australia and New Zealand he is held in as great respect as he commands from the barefoot boy, who, though he admires the throaty hum and beautiful gold and black fur coat, treads warily in the clover lest he step on one of Mr. Bumblebee's sharp needles. These two countries learned his true worth when they attempted to transplant clover there. They discovered that without the bumblebee's aid in pollination their clover would not grow, so the bumblebee, who was not a native of those parts, was imported.

For those who do not know that he works while he eats and bumbles, the bumblebee is the very embodiment of man's midsummer longings. He is as typical of mid-summer as are brown-eyed Susans.

It is not the bumblebee's fault that he is improvident, living from hand to mouth. He knows that with the end of the flowering season he will die, so lives accordingly. Does the condemned man save part of his last meal for the next day?

MEDICINE AS ART

Medical research is one thing, medical practice is another. In the former field are science, cold facts and cold fact-finders; in the latter are warm-blooded human beings, pursuing what is primarily an art, involving social responsibility and human values.

In pointing out these two sides of professional activity, Prof. Howard W. Haggard of Yale, addressing the New York Medical Society, declared "there is today a greater need than ever for socially-minded, public-guiding physicians. The diseases that come to the front in the modern medical readjustment cannot be cured or prevented by impersonal science; they can be controlled only by the close and intelligent co-operation of the individual members of the public with the physician."

Doctors who have at heart the well-being of their patients may be expected to take up the cudgels in answer to Professor Haggard's observation that "today, with our enormous accumulated knowledge, there exists a wider gap between what can be done to control and prevent disease and what is being done than at any previous time in history."

A great enlightened land like this wants no peasant class. Those scarves will be out of fashion in another summer.

Some families stamp out all individuality in the children, while others have to serve five brands of breakfast food.

How some of these countries manage to rattle change in the pocket and a saber simultaneously is a mystery of modern bookkeeping.

China and Spain keep our minds off life in its larger aspects. What ever became of the Coogans?

Canute avoided one costly error in the attempt to push back the sea. He didn't call it a Tide Limitation Authority and set up in a marble palace.

ECHOES OF THE PAST

By Courier Staff Member

Review of the news as it appeared in the Bucks County Gazette issue dated at Bristol Nov. 23, 1876. The Gazette, a weekly newspaper published in Bristol, was discontinued following its merger with the Courier.

The fire brigade of Bristol Woolen mills having requested that the hand engine belonging to Fire Company No. 1, be entrusted to their care for service at fires in their section of the town, the members of No. 1 unanimously resolved on Monday evening, that the request be granted, and much satisfaction with the arrangement was expressed at the meeting. . . .

On last Tuesday there was a meeting held in the office of Anthony Swain, Esq., between the directors of the Water Company and the committee appointed by Burgess and Council. The object of the meeting was in accordance with a resolution of Council, appointing a committee to confer with the directors of the water company to see at what price they would undertake to give fire protection to the whole town for. This, it is understood, would require the company to lay their pipes across the canal, up Bath to Buckley, and up Buckley to Spruce, and also down Otter to Locust. There are some points also on this side of the canal which the company's pipes do not reach, where fire plugs may be required. The number of fire plugs requisite to accomplish this, is estimated to be about 40. . . .

The residence of Capt. Lewis Tice was entered and robbed by burglars on last Sunday evening while the family were at church. A shutter was pried open in the rear of the house and goods of from $100 to $200 in value taken. Among the articles taken were a pair of gold chain bracelets, a silver hunting case watch, a pair of opera glasses, a silver spoon holder, a silver mug, a water-proof circular, a small revolver pistol, and a black cashmere dress pattern. . . .

The Philadelphia Committee of Councils, last night, fixed the tax rate for the ensuing year for that city at $2.50. If Philadelphians want to enjoy the luxury of low taxes, they should remove to Bristol. All new manufacturing establishments are exempt from local tax for 10 years, and the rate on other property is only $1.

There were 6,942 Centennial excursion tickets sold at the Bristol station. Mr. J. Merrick Brown, our ticket agent, thinks that in addition to this, there were at least 500 West Philadelphia tickets and several hundred Kensington tickets sold to Centennial passengers.

Bristol has another physician added to her list of practitioners. Dr. S. A. Dow comes from Mississippi to make his residence here. His office and residence is at Mrs. L. V. Rousseau's, corner of Cedar and Mulberry streets.

A number of houses in Bristol have been rented to the employees of the Grundy mills, and already we see quite an impetus to building operations.

A singing school has commenced in Bensalem. It meets at the residence of John Bunting every Saturday evening. Carson Dyer is the teacher.

The new bridge at Torresdale will be completed next week.

LANGHORNE — The black horse found on the railroad track, and placed in the care of H. C. Parry, has been claimed by the owner living near Plainfield, N. J., from whom it was stolen some time since. He paid the reward of $40 offered for its recovery.

On Friday evening last about eight o'clock, as the farmers were returning from market, an assault was made by two or three masked men upon a son of John Dignam, who resides near Hulmeville. He was knocked insensible by the robbers, and all the money for his load of hay taken from him, which was about $26. The young man returned to consciousness just as the men were making away over the fence. He gave the alarm by shouting, and was heard by a neighbor, whose team was only a short distance behind, and search was made, but to no avail. The cut in the boy's head was of a serious character. This will cause farmers who travel to market to prepare themselves.

Hon. Charles R. Bicking and Isaac C. Fetter, of Newportville, left on Tuesday last for the shore on a gunning expedition.

CHAPTER XXXV

"And then?" snapped Gregory. "Go on, quick."

"I remained there till they had dragged Aunty struggling up the stairs, past me. Directly they'd gone I rushed down and out of the house by the back way. I hadn't understood then what Lord Gavin meant when he spoke of the police spies having been dealt with. Then I found them all in a—all in an awful heap—there in the driveway only fifty yards from the house. I heard the planes coming in as I stood there, feeling sick and faint, and saw through the trees that a lot of bright flares had been lighted on the lawn. I—I was so horrified at the sight of those dead men I don't know what I did next. I think my brain must have gone blank but I suppose I ran back here. The next thing I knew was that I was crouching in the corner shivering with terror when you came in and flashed your light on me."

"I wonder why they didn't lock you up too," Gregory said suddenly.

She shook her head. "I don't think they even knew I live here. Aunty got Lord Gavin's consent to my boarding with her when she took the place but he's so queer about her never having visitors we were afraid he might change his mind afterwards. That's why I've always kept out of his sight. They've been here very little until the last few days and I've never met any of them face to face."

Gregory's sharp questions and Milly's stuttering replies had occupied no more than a couple of minutes, but time had slipped by while Gregory and Rudd were running from the plane, and later creeping round the back of the house. In spite of their well organized getaway from Hook Quay, over half an hour had elapsed since they left Wells staring after them as they raced off into the darkness.

It was now twenty minutes to one and, from Milly's report of what Lord Gavin had said when the Limper's message came through just about midnight, the planes had been due to arrive at a quarter past twelve. They must have been there then for over twenty minutes and would be leaving any moment now.

From Gregory's glimpse of the lawn though the trees, before he had entered the house, he knew that fifty or sixty men at least were gathered there. He might find Gavin's plane and get Sabine out of it but someone was almost certain to spot him and the odds were hopelessly against his being able to get her away safely.

He almost wished that he had surrendered to the certainty of Sabine's arrest, given the police the information which he had beaten out of the Limper and enabled Wells to concentrate the forces of the law here, but it was too late to think of that now. Standing there, grim faced and silent, he racked his brain for some refuge to which he might take Sabine if only he could deal with the pilot of Gavin's plane; but every second was precious and he dared not wait to formulate any complicated plan. Suddenly he turned to Milly.

"The key of the Bell Tower! D'you know where it is?"

She nodded toward the sideboard. "In the drawer on the left. Aunty keeps all the keys in there."

Rudd wrenched the drawer open. Gregory shone his torch down into it and Milly snatched up a heavy old-fashioned key from among the rest.

"This is it."

"Right," said Gregory. "Rudd must come with me; I need him. We don't want you mixed up in the fighting but are you prepared to act like a little heroine?"

"I—I'll try," she stammered.

"Bless you! That's the spirit! Now this is what I want you to do. As they've been signalling from the Bell Tower the door of it is probably open already. You know the park and the path round the back from here, across the drive, up to the tower through the wood. That's well away from the lawn so it's unlikely you'll run into anyone. If you hear any of these people you can hide in the woods till they've gone past. I want you to get to the tower, see the door's open, and put this key into the lock on the inside—on the inside, remember. That's what's so important. Think you can do it? Gerry'll be mighty proud of you if you will."

That reference to Gerry Wells was just the psychological touch needed to give Milly renewed courage.

"All right," she said, throwing up her head.

"Well done!" Gregory squeezed her arm. "Directly you've got that key in the door go in among the trees and hide there until the trouble's over; get as far from the lawn as you can. Blessings on you my dear."

The three of them left the house together. Milly to skirt its back and make her way through the dark shrubberies; Gregory and Rudd together, past the museum buildings and the conservatories, into the grove which lay to its right front, at the far end of which, they knew, lay the hangar that housed Lord Gavin's plane.

For tense moments they stumbled through the undergrowth, not daring to show a light, then emerged cautiously from behind the hangar into the open. Two hundred yards away, on the far side of the lawn, they could see the dark bulk of the other grove with the Bell Tower rising from it. No lights showed at its steel mast now. Its purpose of guiding the planes in had already been served.

Gregory peered out beyond the angle of the hangar. Bright flares still lit the lawn. The planes reposed before them in an irregular row. One or two men, the pilots probably, stood near each but the majority were gatheed in a solid crowd on the gravel sweep before the house. At the open front door Lord Gavin's small hunched figure, supported by two sticks, was silhouetted against the bright light of the hall. He was evidently giving the foreign agitators, whom he had imported, his last instructions before they dispersed to spread anarchy in the great industrial areas.

His plane was already outside the hangar; its nearest wing-tip no more than a dozen yards from the spot where Gregory crouched. For a second the wild thought entered his head of attempting to make off in it; but the men by the other planes were within such easy range it seemed certain he would be shot down before he could scramble on board and get the machine into the air. Besides, he was not sure yet that Sabine was in the plane. If she were not he would have bungled things for good and all.

He turned to Rudd. "Got your pocket knife handy?" he asked in a quick whisper.

"Yes sir."

"Good. We'll need it to cut her free if she's there. Don't wait to be shot at but shoot first if they try to stop us. Ready now? Come on!"

Going down upon his hands and knees he came out into the open and crept swiftly toward the waiting plane. Now, he blessed the friendly darkness and the clouds that hung low and threatening, obscuring the stars. The nearest men visible in the flickering light from the flares were a good fifty yards away.

With a last crouching sprint Gregory reached the body of the plane and wrenched open the door. The light on the far side of it came through the windows sufficiently for him to see the interior of the cabin. A long bundle lay in the after part of it behind the two rear seats. It was Sabine, a cloth wound round her face, her arms and ankles lashed with rough cords and a couple of weighty iron bars fastened to her feet; trussed ready for Gavin's men to heave into the sea once they were well away over the Channel.

Swiftly but cautiously Gregory and Rudd drew her limp body out and laid it on the grass. Rudd's knife bit into the cords. Gregory unmuffled her face, pressing his hand lightly over her mouth to prevent her screaming before she realized that it was he who was manhandling her.

Another moment and they had her on her feet, limp and half dazed, supported between them.

"Think you can run, my sweet?" Gregory said softly.

She flung one arm round his neck. "Those cords, they almost stopped my circulation," she whispered, "wait. I will be better in a minute."

"Hang on to her," Gregory breathed, removing her arm from his neck and gently passing her to Rudd. Then he went down on his knees again and, creeping forward a little, peered under the nose of the plane. Its pilot, who had been hidden by the bulk of the machine before, was standing within seven yards, his back turned, looking toward the house. A murmur came from the gravel drive and then the sound of crunching feet. Lord Gavin had finished his address to the red servants of evil and the crowd in front of the doorway was breaking up.

There was not an instant to lose. Gregory dived back behind the plane and spoke to Rudd. "They're coming; you'll have to carry her. Fireman's lift and gun in your right hand. Too late to make a detour; we'll have to chance a dash across the open."

Rudd stooped and threw Sabine across his strong shoulders as though she had been an infant. Without a word he plunged forward straight for the Bell Tower. Gregory followed, walking swiftly backwards, ready to fire instantly they were spotted and covering Rudd's retreat.

Rudd had traversed sixty yards before they were seen; then a cry went up from one of the men by the flares. In a second Gavin's pilot swung round with a drawn pistol in his hand. He fired from his hip and the bullet sang past Gregory's head; but Gregory had had him marked already. His pistol cracked, the man's knees gave under him, and he crashed forward on his face.

Gregory ducked to escape the bullets of the men by the flares. As he did so a series of sharp coughs told him that they were firing at him with pistols which had mauser silencers attached. Suddenly he sprinted forward, covered fifty yards before he stopped, swung round, and fired again. One of the men by the flares staggered sideways with a scream.

The lawn was full of racing figures now. The scattered group by the terrace was surging forward in a long irregular wave. Lord Gavin still stood on the doorstep, waving one of his sticks and shouting something which Gregory could not catch. Rudd had already covered two thirds of the way to the Bell Tower when Sabine cried: "Put me down! I can manage now."

He slipped her from his shoulders. She stood rocking for a moment then began to stagger forward while he turned and fired at the nearest of the running men. The man ran on, Rudd fired again. The fellow spun round and fell.

Rudd's intervention gave Gregory another chance. He bounded forward. Both of them fired twice into the mass of shouting figures that were thundering across the grass then they turned and ran on together.

A bullet ploughed up the ground at Gregory's feet, another whistled past his ear, a third hit the gun in Rudd's hand knocking it out of his grasp.

Gregory halted and emptied the remaining contents of his automatic into the oncoming mob. Rudd lurched forward, grabbed up his pistol, and dashed on again. Next instant he came up with Sabine. She was now no more than twenty yards from the Bell Tower.

Jamming his now useless automatic into his pocket Gregory pounded up beside them. Each caught Sabine by an arm and half carried, half dragged her toward their goal.

"Come on! Come on!" shrilled a treble voice and Milly's form loomed up by the Tower. She was holding the door wide open for them.

"Good God!" gasped Gregory as they dashed through the entrance. "Why didn't you hide as I told you to?"

She shook her head. "I had to stay and help if I could." Then she flung her frail weight against the heavy door and banged it to. Rudd grabbed the key and turned it in the lock.

Benny Cohen, Mr. Harry Hopkins, Mr. Robert Jackson, Mr. Jerome Frank and Mr. David Lilienthal—that these should constitute the inner White House group, strong enough not only to impress their own regulatory ideas upon the nation but able to nullify every conservative suggestion from such men as Mr. Jesse Jones; to reject every recommendation from a business source; to make the unfortunate Mr. Morgenthau eat his own anti-pump-priming words; to dismiss as unworthy of attention the warnings of the Vice-President—reflection upon these things and knowledge that they are so is the reason for the despondency existing among the less radical Administration adherents.

—o—

THEY recognize that the extreme left-wing group is in the saddle; that its closeness to the President is such that no headway can be made against it and that the President himself is in a continuously suspicious and vindictive frame of mind toward business. The belief is strong that at least some of his advisers do not really want business to recover. There is no better evidence of this than the glee with which they are preparing for the "Devil Hunt," which it is proposed to conduct this Summer under the guise of an antimonopoly investigation. The full weight of the White House was exerted to get the resolution through in a form that would put the investigation in the "right hands." The design back of the proposed "probe" is political; the effect will be still further to paralyze industry and retard recovery. As Congress prepares to adjourn, the lack of confidence between the President and the Vice-President is an open secret. They preserve surface cordiality, but it deceives no one. The Administration leaders in Senate and House are puppets who are told what to do and do it, for personal political reasons, but with an absence of conviction that is thinly disguised.

—o—

AGAINST the judgment of his professional political manager, Mr. Farley, but urged on by the Corcorans and Cohens, the President has launched a punitive drive to eliminate from public life Democratic Senators who refused to follow him. The first effort, in Iowa, was unsuccessful, but that seems merely to have whetted the appetites of the amateurs for the fray. Secure in their White House support, promulgating their plans through milk-fed and adulatory journalists, they are having a glorious experience and a grand time. If the true picture of these men and of what they are doing could be gotten to the people, it is inconceivable that, despite relief funds and Government propaganda, they would not react definitely and unfavorably. The difficulty is that the facts are obscured—first, by the personality of the President, behind whom they hide; second, by the calculated demagoguery with which the whole New Deal is saturated and of which the anti-monopoly investigation this Summer is a fine sample.

ON SCREENS IN BRISTOL

BRISTOL

Your prescription to banish the blues and make yourself feel 20 years younger is furnished by "Doctor Rhythm," the Paramount picture which opened last night at the Bristol Theatre, starring Bing Crosby and Beatrice Lillie in a new musical comedy partnership that should make screen history.

Croon-conditioned as only Bing knows how to make it, and gag-infested by London's inimitable Bea, who proves once again that fun never sets on the British Empire, "Doctor Rhythm" is the screen version of one of O. Henry's most popular tales, directed by Hollywood's master of frivolous screen musicals, Frank Tuttle, who was responsible for "Waikiki Wedding" and "College Holiday." For this festive production he selected an all-star cast, including Mary Carlisle, Laura Hope Crews, Andy Devine, Frank Eliott, Bill Austin and Louis Armstrong and his Band.

GRAND

Joe E. Brown plays the part of a small town soda jerker dignified with the title "Maitre D' Squirt" in "Wide Open Faces," his latest Columbia comedy, which comes to the Grand Theatre, Monday and Tuesday, matinee and night.

The picture offers Joe another opportunity for one of his famous characterizations, that of a small town boy battling tremendous odds. Among other obstacles Joe is pitted against a regiment of loot-hungry crooks.

The fun starts when a notorious bank robber drops off at Joe's fountain one day and is captured by G-Men after confiding to the comedian that he is anxious to visit a deserted hotel in the vicinity. When Joe tells reporters the story the news is printed in metropolitan dailies and the underworld concludes that the bandit's last haul must be hidden in the deserted hotel.

LANDRETH DEFEATS WISSINOMING CLUB

Hitting the offerings of three visiting pitchers, the Landreth Seeds defeated the Wissinoming club, pace setters of the Philadelphia League yesterday afternoon at Landreth ball park, 10 to 5.

Howard Black relieving Ashby for the Farmers in the second inning after the Wissies had scored five runs, gave a wonderful exhibition of pitching, holding the visitors to three hits and scoreless for the rest of the game striking out nine.

Claude Lodge drove in five of the Seeds' 10 runs.

All of the home team with the exception of Black who had a base on balls and a sacrifice made one or more hits.

The base running of Dougherty and a fast double play by Griggs and Barcalow were the features.

Howlett and Cressman were the best hitters for Wissinoming.

Landreth plays a twilight game at Frankford, Wednesday.

TWILIGHT LEAGUE MAY DECIDE CHAMPIONSHIP

The first half race of the Bristol Twilight League may be decided this week as several postponed games are listed. Tonight, St. Ann's meets the Rohm & Haas nine. These two teams will also battle Wednesday night in a postponed game. Both games are scheduled for Grundy's diamond.

Also on schedule tonight is the Superior-Odd Fellows game. A loss to either club may eliminate it from the first half. These two teams are also scheduled for Wednesday night. Friday night, the Grundy team will meet Superior at Leedom's field in a postponed game and the Odd Fellows play Rohm and Haas in a tie play-off. This tilt is scheduled for the Maple Beach diamond.

There will be a meeting of the circuit, Thursday night in the St. Ann's club-house. All managers and directors are requested to be present.

SEVERAL NEW FACES TO BE SEEN IN BOXING RING

Several new local boys will be introduced to the local followers of amateur boxing tonight as the St. Ann's Athletic Association holds its weekly card in its arena, Wood and Franklin streets. According to Match-maker Johnny Straffe, the show booked will top the two first-class shows that were put on for the past weeks.

Heading the card for the night will be the fast-stepping "Eddie" Brown, Irish youth from Lambertville who has joined the St. Ann's stable. Brown has fought in Jersey in several bouts and amazed the Jersey fans in the Trenton tournament last season when he gave the champion, Francis Bruno, a really close battle.

Brown is a crowd pleaser and is in action every minute of the fight. Fight patrons who wish to see a real fighter in action should not miss this boy who stacks up against Gene Campollo, Ontario C. C. Campollo has a long fight list attached to his name and should prove a worthy opponent for the new St. Ann's mittman.

A Langhorne colored youth, Raymond Robinson, is also scheduled to make his Bristol debut. Robinson has been ready for several weeks, but Matchmaker Straffe hesitated in putting him on a card until he felt certain that he is in excellent shape. Now that time has come and Straffe has booked him with Jesse Cotton, Ontario. Cotton flattened Russ Pearson, St. Ann's, last week, and Robinson is out for revenge for his pal.

His winning streak of eight straight stopped by Rocco Piccinin last week, "Hokey" Leighton, Croydon youth who represents the Rescue Squad, is out to begin a new streak, but is expected to encounter plenty of difficulty in John Diodati, the veteran from the Ontario. Leighton put up a wonderful bout against Piccinini, and as Diodati is rated in the same class as the Penn-Mar fighter, Leighton will have to be at his best to cop a victory.

A newcomer to the local fans is Percy Cooper, who will represent the St. Ann's organization. Cooper fights Mike Greb, and this battle is expected to be the furious type of battle, as both boys go in and throw ring technique to the winds and keep swinging their mitts from the opening round.

The next Bristolian in the lineup is Joseph J. Ferrara. Ferrara needs no introduction as he is improving every fight. He won handily last week and is facing sterner opposition in Nick Spano, Older Boys' Club. Ferrara has proven time and time again that he possesses the fighting heart of a boxer and has never ducked an opponent. He has the ability to use science in his boxing bouts and ofttimes is willing to swap blow for blow with an opponent.

Henry Varara, St. Ann's, has finally succeeded in securing his return bout with Pat Mattucci, Ontario, who has won 15 straight bouts. These boys fought on the opening card, with Mattucci being the winner in a close fight. Varara has been after Match-maker Straffe for two weeks, seeking a return match. Now, he has his chance and is out to even matters with the Philadelphian. This bout was originally booked for the open-air bouts held in the Cambria, and Straffe deserves plenty of credit in getting it assigned to Bristol.

For the fourth time this season, Frank Tutrella, Older Boys' Club, has been matched with Andy Schiavone, Ontario. They met twice in Philadelphia and in Wilmington. Now they will strut their stuff here. Schiavone is one up on the Older Boys' Club fighter, and this should be a good bout.

In the opening number, which will be put on at 8:30 o'clock, sharp, Jimmy Lefferts, Ontario, fights Babe Mattucci, Atlas A. A. Lefferts feels that he can stop Lefferts' streak, and will be out to do this tonight.
